2 A Closer Look

Look at one of your eyes in a mirror. The white part is the sclera and the colored part is the iris. The small black spot in the center is the pupil. The pupil is a hole that lets light into the eye. When it's dark, your pupils open to let more light in.

Your eyelids and eyelashes protect your eyes from dust and dirt. Your eyelids also keep light out.

Inside Your Eye

Light reflects off an object. The light then enters the eye and goes through a lens. This lens focuses the light on the retina at the back of the eye. It makes a picture of the object on the retina.

The retina has millions of optic cells. They detect light and colors. The optic nerve collects the information and takes it to the brain.

Cameras have lenses, too. What other things have lenses?

Floppy's Phonics

RODRICK HUNT AND ALEX BRYCHTA
 PHONICS CONSULTANT:
 DEBBIE HEPPLEWHITE

A structured synthetic phonics programme from Oxford Reading Tree

Floppy's Phonics has been developed to help students learn and use the phonemes that make up the English language.

- > Clear progression through five levels ensures students become confident readers with good pronunciation.
- > Each student pack provides various Sounds and Letters books and an Activity Book per level.
- > Sounds and Letters books teach sounds and develop blending skills.
- > Activity Books help practise sounds in and out of context.
- > Floppy's Phonics Fiction and Non-Fiction are fully-decodable readers, ideal to practise phonics skills learnt in the Sounds and Letters books.
- > A teacher's kit full of resources to exploit in class.

For further information about Floppy's Phonics and the Oxford Reading Tree, contact your local Oxford representative.

A unique bridge from phonics to richer reading

Biff, Chip and Kipper story collections support the transition from decoding to richer reading.
