So then he hits the lion on the head with his sword. But the lion only opens one eye and goes back to sleep. In the end, Hercules kills the lion with his hands, and after that he takes off its skin. He quickly puts the lion's skin over his head and back. 'When I wear this, no arrows or swords can kill me,' he says happily. He then runs back to the king's palace. Eurystheus is very afraid when he sees Hercules and he quickly gets into a big brown jar. 'There's a monster with nine heads in the Lake of Lerna,' cries Eurystheus from the jar. 'People call it the Hydra. Your task number two is to go and kill it!'

Near the palace, Hercules meets his young cousin, Iolaus. 'I can't stop and talk,' says Hercules. 'I'm going to the Lake of Lerna. I must kill the Hydra there.'

'Can I come too?' asks Iolaus excitedly.

When they arrive at the lake, it is nearly dark. Hercules puts some fire onto an arrow and shoots it over the water. 'I want to call the Hydra to me!' he says.

Suddenly the nine heads of the Hydra come out of the lake. They look at Iolaus and Hercules with angry red eyes. 'Help!' cries Iolaus.

The year is 1943. Bruno's family must move from their home to a new house far away. A tall fence running alongside stretches as far as the eye can see and cuts him off from the strange people he can see in the distance. Bruno sets out to explore this desolate new place.

Themes: childhood innocence, friendship, racial discrimination, genocide.
